

DORALEOUS AND ASSOCIATES

As the dust settled and the last of the goblins fell, Doraleous knew they had emerged victorious. The city of Drakemount was safe once more, thanks to the bravery and skill of his band of mercenaries. But their adventures were far from over. As they emerged from the mine, they knew that more challenges awaited them in the world of magic and creatures. And Doraleous was ready to face them head on, leading his band into the unknown with courage and determination.

For in a world filled with danger and darkness, it was heroes like Doraleous and his band who stood as beacons of hope and light, ready to fight for justice and defend the innocent against the forces of evil. And so, their adventure continued, with new battles to be fought and new creatures to be encountered in the ancient times of magic and adventure.

Brian M. Shoemaker is a devoted single father whose life revolves around caring for his son, who lives with epileptic seizures. This book marks Brian's debut as an author, written with the heartfelt hope that its success will allow him to become a stay-at-home dad and provide more comprehensive care for his child.

Brian penned this work in memory of Tony Schnur, John Etheridge, Brett Triplett, Nate Panning, and Bryan Mahoney, drawing inspiration from their creativity and community spirit. Through his writing, he aims to create a future where he can be both a full-time caregiver and a successful author, balancing the challenges of parenthood with his passion for storytelling.
